II. Conservation Easements:

Acquisition of conservation easements is another method of influencing land uses on lands that remain in private ownership. Over the last several years, programs have funded acquisition of conservation easements on several thousand acres of land in the Delta:

- U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) has acquired easements on privately owned duck clubs, largely in the Yolo Bypass.
- USFWS has acquired easements on lands in the Stone Lakes National Wildlife Refuge.
- The Wildlife Conservation Board has acquired easements that protect and enhance wetland values and that would result in restoration of wetland habitat on agricultural land.
- The Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) has acquired easements through the Wetlands Reserve Program that also results in the restoration of wetland habitat on agricultural land.
- Department of Fish and Game (DFG) and San Joaquin Council of Governments (SACOG) have acquired easements that provide mitigation for impacts of development. The DFG easement provides seasonal and year round habitat values through a mosaic of agriculture and wetlands, and the SJCOG easement keeps lands in row and field crops to protect Sandhill Crane foraging habitat.

One easement covering 649 acres was acquired in 2003 by The Nature Conservancy. The easement allows farming of field and row crops, but prohibits vineyards and orchards.

The total acreage of listed conservation easements is 12,252 (2.5%).
